VINA'S DISTRESS.

She Objects to Being Locked up in Prison.

Vina King, whose case was referred to the Circuit Court for settlement, created quite a scene when taken out to the prison yesterday. As soon as she was well inside the jail yard she threw herself on her face on the stone floor and tore her hair. She scratched her face until the blood flowed, and declared that she would rather die than be locked up in the prison. After rolling in the dust for a while she was locked up in a cell to await her trial.

When Vina was taken from the Police Station she wept bitter tears. It is said that she has transferred her vagrant affections from Washington to a turnkey in the Station House, and was heart-broken at the thought of leaving.

WANTED SOME BITTERS.

But the Clerk had to Explain the Matter.

The Kaiulani bitters have been talked of a great deal during the last few days, and a funny incident in connection with them came to light yesterday. Naturally, this incident has not been talked of to any large extent, but it has leaked out, and is positively true.

A lady, not a resident of the islands, who wished to take a few specimens of the more unique features of island life back to the States with her, has been a constant reader of the ADVERTISER since she has been in Honolulu, and of course she read the article in the paper about the now famous "panacea." Not being very well posted in regard to politics, or else glancing only at the headlines, she looked on the matter as an advertisement, and thought that a patent medicine manufactured so far away from home would be a curiosity.

She called at that vast emporium on Kaahumanu street during the day and asked a clerk for "a bottle of that medicine—you know, the one with the Hawaiian name." Not realizing that anyone could possibly mean the bitters, the polite attendant did not faint; but when the lady at last remembered the name and asked for the "Princess Kaiulani Bitters," Mr. Davies' underling nearly swooned. He preserved enough presence of mind, however, to explain that the bitters were not put up in bottles.

The Coming Holiday.

It has been finally decided that the parade on the 17th will take place at 9:30 in the morning. All the companies will turn out, and a big display will be given. It is expected that the Annexation Club will complete its part of the programme today.

The Vancouver Line.

LONDON, Dec. 25.—Mr. J. H. Hogan, M. P., in an article in the Westminster Review, says that the Huddart-Parker scheme has powerfully impressed politicians and traders on both sides that an imperial subsidy to the Vancouver mail service will help to federalize the British postal service.
